Stress is often referred to as "the silent killer" because it not only wreaks havoc on our health, but can lead to risky behavior and in extreme cases, dangerous actions. Suicide is a leading cause of death among U.S. college students, and for people battling mental health issues, the stress of studies can act as a trigger. But researchers at NYU had an idea: What if roommates were trained to keep an eye on each other's stress levels? Read about their findings on page 4 and visit metro.us for more stories on mental health issues.

NRA CHIEF SLAMS ANTI-GUN 'ELITES'

1 The head of the National Rifle Association lashed out at gun control advocates on Thursday, saying Democratic elites are politicizing the latest mass school shooting in the United States to try to erode constitutionally guaranteed gun rights. NRA chief executive Wayne LaPierre echoed President Donald Trump's call to arm teachers to prevent school shootings, and weighed into a long-running political and cultural divide over access to weapons that has been inflamed by last week's massacre at a Florida high school that killed 17 students and staff. "The elites don't care not one whit about America's school system and school children," LaPierre told a friendly audience of conservatives outside Washington. "Their goal is to eliminate the Second Amendment and our firearms freedoms so they can eradicate all individual freedoms."

COUNSEL FILES NEW CHARGES AGAINST AIDES

2 U.S. Special Counsel Robert Mueller filed a new set of criminal charges on Thursday against President Donald Trump's former campaign aides Paul Manafort and Rick Gates that include bank and tax fraud, escalating a legal battle that started last year. The charges were contained in a 32-count indictment against the two men that was filed in the Eastern District of Virginia in Alexandria. Manafort and Gates are already facing criminal charges by Mueller's office in U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia that include conspiracy to launder money, conspiracy to defraud the United States and failure to register as foreign agents for political work they did for a pro-Russian Ukrainian political party. They were among the first to be charged, as part of Mueller's ongoing investigation into whether the Trump presidential campaign colluded with Russia.

STATES TRY TO BLOCK REPEAL OF NET NEUTRALITY

4 A coalition of 22 state attorneys general and the District of Columbia on Thursday refiled legal challenges intended to block the Trump administration's repeal of landmark rules designed to ensure a free and open internet from taking effect. The Federal Communications Commission officially published its order overturning the net neutrality rules in the Federal Register on Thursday, a procedural step that allows for the filing of legal challenges. The states, along with web browser developer Mozilla Corp and video-sharing website Vimeo Inc had filed petitions preserving their right to sue in January, but agreed to withdraw them last Friday and wait for the FCC's publication. The Republican-led FCC in December voted 3-2 to overturn rules barring service providers from blocking, slowing access to or charging more for certain content on the internet.

OFFICIAL FOCUSED ON ELECTION HACKS LET GO

5 The head of a federal agency who has helped U.S. states protect election systems from possible cyber attacks by Russia or others is being removed from his post by Republican House of Representatives Speaker Paul Ryan and the White House. Matthew Masterson, currently chairman of the U.S. Election Assistance Commission and a former Ohio state official, has been passed over for a second four-year term as one of the agency's four commissioners, according to sources familiar with the matter. It is up to the House speaker to recommend a nominee for the commissioner post that Masterson currently holds, with the president then making a formal nomination. Masterson has been a popular figure among state election officials, many of whom have praised his expertise and leadership on cybersecurity issues.

Could roommates help college students get the mental health services they need?

Researchers at NYU looked at how sharing a living space helps people understand each others' levels of distress, which may lead to a better safety net.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

It's no secret that college students are under a lot of stress, but getting those students to seek help still proves to be a challenge.

Roommates may be the key to connecting students to the mental health support they need, according to a study from New York University.

"This is a really important topic. College should be an exciting moment of people's lives, but oftentimes you see a lot of college kids experiencing a lot of stress and difficulties, including social and academic [challenges]," said Qi Xu, a doctoral student in NYU's Department of Psychology. "Sometimes, there's really better outcomes that could lead to."

Suicide is a leading cause of death among college students in the United States, according to the Suicide Prevention Research Center. Most schools have mental-health initiatives and outreach efforts, but Xu and other NYU researchers wondered if roommates could help.

"Often, college and universities are pretty proactive in reaching out to students, providing different counseling services for mental health problems, but students hesitate about whether they should seek out this support," Xu said.

Resident assistants in dorms are commonly trained to spot signs of mental-health concerns, but because roommates tend to spend a lot of time together, they might have better insight into each others' emotions.

Researchers asked more than 180 pairs of roommates at multiple universities to first rate their own level of distress and then rate how distressed they thought their roommates were.

Students were pretty sensitive to the mental suffering their roommates felt — and tend to think that that distress level matches their own — but they're still underestimating how stressed out their roommates actually are, the study found.

This is useful insight, Xu said, because if people tend to underrate their roommates, it means

Roommates should be trained to spot signs of distress so they can help each other get the mental health support they need, new research suggests. iSTOCK schools might need to pay extra attention when students report something.

Because students might not know what to do in these situations, the researchers suggested roommates be trained, like the RAs are, to spot signs of distress.

"More universal training on how to identify and respond to the distress of peers might have the benefit of encouraging conversations among roommates about what actions each might take if he or she notices another experiencing extreme distress," the researchers wrote in their paper, published Monday in the journal Personality and Social Psychology Bulletin.

Xu considered that putting an added responsibility on students' shoulders to watch out for their roommates' well-being may add to their own stress levels, but she said that previous research has shown that those who are providing support for others experience a psychological benefit, as well.

Ultimately, more research needs to be done, and Xu believes this is worth looking into.

"This is a really important topic not only from a research perspective but for the general implication, for the community health of universities," she said. "I hope our research can lift up and ... draw public attention to these topics."

Airbnb looks to luxury rentals

Stymied by regulators, site looks to high-end vacations, hotels for growth.

Airbnb is rolling out services aimed at attracting travelers looking for luxury accommodations and traditional hotels, the latest move to contend with sputtering growth in its original home-renting business.

The company Thursday unveiled a product that bundles Airbnb's poshest properties with high-end travel services, as well as a separate category of homes guaranteed to be clean and comfortable. Airbnb will also make it easier for boutique hotels and bed-and-breakfasts — once its arch enemies — to list their rooms on its online booking site.

The company is billing the effort as a way to win over travelers who have shied away from the risks and quirks that are part of renting a stranger's apartment.

But it is also an acknowledgment that its core business has hit roadblocks around the world. Regulators in cities like New York, London and its hometown of San Francisco have cracked down on short-term rentals, blaming Airbnb for exacerbating already tight housing markets. The company has been forced to slash its listings in popular cities as part of its concessions to regulators. REUTERS

'Game Night' is gonna play you like a piano

Chatting with directors Jonathan Goldstein and John Francis Daley and star Billy Magnussen about the comedy thriller.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

Surely, we've all been involved in a game night that has turned hostile. Someone is a blatant cheater; or maybe somebody else has lucked their way to victory against all logic.

So it is little wonder that the comedic directing team of Jonathan Goldstein and John Francis Daley saw so much cinematic potential in "Game Night," which revolves around a murder-mystery night that becomes too real when one of the participants is actually kidnapped—but the others think it is part of the game.

We sat down with Goldstein, Daley and one of the film's standout performers, Billy Magnussen, to chat about the film, playing their audience like a piano and the pitch-perfect casting of Jesse Plemons.

What first attracted you to "Game Night"?
John Francis Daley: That it straddled two genres. You got to have the fun of the comedy and the thrills of the thriller.

Jonathan Goldstein: We watched loads of movies where the audiences spend half the game guessing what's happening next and what's Things go very wrong for Billy Magnussen and Sharon Horgan in "Game Night," in theaters today.

WARNER BROS

real and what's not real. Part of the fun of this was, like Hitchcock said, "playing the audience like a piano." It was also fun to explore what would happen if a group of friends let their competitiveness take over their reason. We all crave this competitive outlet. Especially after a week of work and stress, you always want someone to yell at — all in good fun of course.

Was blending those genres a challenge?
JFD: It made it doubly challenging. We wanted both genres to be satisfying, and that meant we had to execute it perfectly. We made extra sure that this didn't look like a brightly lit studio comedy. We wanted it to have the look and feel of a thriller, without ruining the comedic moments in it.

they would play with it. You always want to work with collaborative people, because that's the best thing about art. Comedy is like jazz — you want to riff off of each other.

Talk about casting Jesse Plemons in the film.

JG: We wanted Jesse Plemons from the get-go. Because we could have gone very silly with that role, which would have killed any of the suspense. What Jesse was able to do was make it very dramatic and keep it grounded. That was part of our whole casting for the film. That's why we went for actors that are known more for drama than comedy, like Kyle Chandler. They helped to make the laughs more surprising.

Did you have a game night with the cast?

JG: We didn't, because as directors we were so ensconced in the film. We encouraged the cast to do so, though. And I think they played Clue throughout the film.

BM: We would play Clue hardcore during shooting. I don't know how many times I yelled at the board, "It was Colonel Mustard!" My tactic for most board games is just pointing and yelling at people's faces.

I hated everyone in "Every Day," but it still made me cry. ORION PICTURES

"Every Day"

Director: Michael Sucsy
Stars: Angourie Rice, Justice Smith
Rating: PG-13

The high school students in "Every Day" are so perfect, it's distractingly perfect. But over the course of the film, they start to win you over. Angourie Rice's performance as Rhiannon starts to resonate, and while the film takes the precise path you expect it to, it handles the machinations and emotion of the characters and A's plight in a careful and touching fashion.

Sure it occasionally verges into cheesy melodrama. But it works. You'll even be tempted to forgive the film for its impeccable high schoolers, too, as it fits in with its message of tolerance and openness.

Clearly, having despised its characters for long periods, I'm not the intended audience or even generation for "Every Day." But if it still managed to make me weep, then just imagine the impact that it could have on younger viewers. GREGORY WAKEMAN

The twists and terrific cast of "Game Night" stop it from falling apart. WARNER BROS.

"Game Night"

Director: John Francis Daley, Jonathan Goldstein
Stars: Jason Bateman, Rachel McAdams
Rating: R

"Game Night" is a comedy that often feels like it is about to fall apart. While its jokes are solid, they're never overly remarkable. And it's constantly trying to be a legitimate thriller — something that it never comes close to achieving.

But "Game Night" always has an ace up its sleeve that pulls you back in. Most of the time that's simply down to the cast, as they're eminently watchable whether they're separated or paired up.

They're also aided by scene-stealing turns from Kyle Chandler as the wily and alluring Brooks, and Jesse Plemons as a creepy, jealous neighbor. So while "Game Night" won't give David Fincher anything to worry about, its twists and reveals just do enough to keep you interested. It may be frivolous, but it's fun too. GW

"Annihilation"

Director: Alex Garland
Stars: Natalie Portman, Jennifer Jason Leigh

"Annihilation" is a demanding watch. For most it will be too much. But those viewers that like to be challenged will find it one of the most exhilarating films of the year.

The film sparkles with an originality and intensity that constantly has you on guard, as Alex Garland creates a disorienting, chaotic and gorgeous world. He punctuates moments of beauty and calm with jolts of creepy imagery that sticks with you.

"Annihilation" won't be for everyone. Its conclusion is beyond description and will leave you haunted and beguiled by its sumptuous concoction of horror and sci-fi. It has all the ingredients to be a bona-fide sci-fi classic. GW

"Annihilation" blends 'Alien' with '2001' to create a gorgeous and challenging sci-fi spectacle. PARAMOUNT PICTURES

'Bowie' photo exhibit opens at Morrison Hotel Gallery

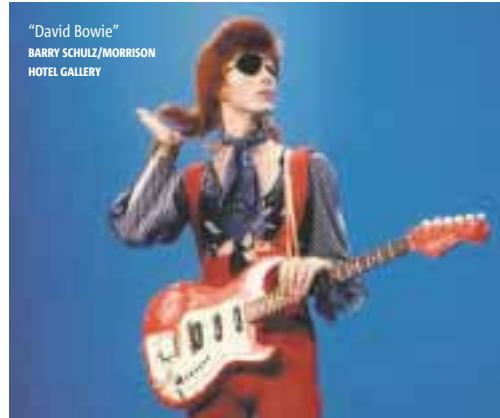

The free monthlong show features iconic portraits spanning the late musical legend's career.

KATE MOONEY

"David Bowie Is" opens at the Brooklyn Museum on March 2, but before that, we've got another exhibit honoring the late musical legend: Today, the Morrison Hotel Gallery in SoHo launches "Bowie," a free monthlong photography show.

"Bowie" features a collection of portraits spanning Bowie's versatile career and his many personas. It includes the 1973 "Aladdin Sane," Brian Duffy's iconic image of Bowie in lightning-bolted face paint; Barry Shultz's "David Bowie," depicting the singer's Halloween Jack alter-ego, sporting burnt sienna hair and an eye-patch while touring Holland for "Diamond Dogs"; Masayoshi Sukita's intimate black-and-white shot from 1977's "Heroes"; and several behind-the-scenes shots from the singer's life on tour. Signed prints will be for sale.

Let this show prime you for BK Museum's "David Bowie Is," a multimedia showcase of over 400

Draft blog from an NFL hopeful

Kemoko Turay gives Metro a first-person look at the NFL draft process. GETTY IMAGES

A behind-the-scenes look at what it's like to prep for the NFL draft.

sports@metro.us

Following a fantastic Senior Bowl, defensive end Kemoko Turay is becoming a fast riser up the draft boards of many teams.

Last season, Turay had 65 tackles, including five sacks and seven tackles for loss in his final season at Rutgers. This performance along with his strong showing all week at the Senior Bowl has made him a hot topic and one of the most popular names to emerge from the showcase.

Turay will be providing Metro with an exclusive blog throughout the draft process as he emerges from the Senior Bowl and now looks ahead to the NFL combine:

Without a doubt, the Senior Bowl is one fantastic setup, a real opportunity not just to showcase my talent but to meet with teams. It's a busy week but a tremendous chance to learn about different teams as they, in turn, learn about me.

The schedule is intense, to say the least.

Being from Rutgers, one of the big things that we are taught is about time management. The program is very detail oriented in that regard and it is something we hang our hat on. During a week like the Senior Bowl, that mentality is really paying off as I transition from college to a career in the NFL.

In life, you have moments where you have to be all-in, have to take advantage and really have your focus. To be successful in the NFL, you have to keep that mentality throughout. I wanted to show that at the Senior Bowl.

I would wake up around 5:15 in the morning — this even though we didn't have to be down for breakfast until about three hours later. I'd wake up in the morning and pray as my Muslim faith is an important part of who I am. Then

I'd take time to stretch and roll-out in the room before heading down to breakfast. You want to take a week like this seriously and I wanted to maximize every minute possible.

It's about making good decisions, about maximizing the possibility and the opportunity that is handed to you.

My roommate during the week was another pass rusher, Ogbonnia Okoronkwo. I was impressed with him as a player and a person. It was great getting to know him during the week and see how selfless he was during the process. I look forward to seeing what he does in the NFL.

After breakfast, you'd meet with different scouts and general managers for a bit. The whole week is about networking. You meet with all these NFL teams, they are on the field watching you during practice. They talk and meet, both formal and casual. I met with a lot of teams, most of the teams around the league I'd say. They were familiar with me from Rutgers and playing in the Big Ten.

It is definitely unique though, being coached by the Broncos during Senior Bowl week and being able to take advantage of NFL coaching. There's a lot to learn and process.

After some time for meetings, we had a team meeting followed by a short break. Around 12:30 p.m. we'd have practice. This is a unique chance to learn and grow as a player. In turn, you are under this microscope. Teams are watching to see you, to see if you fit into their system.

It's difficult to block everything out, but you have to just focus on being you, on playing the game. It's different knowing that scouts and teams are watching you practice.

You hear teams tell you that the practices that week at the Senior Bowl are important, perhaps even more important than the game itself. They really get to see and watch you up close. Not just technique but also how hard you work.

There are film sessions and more meetings that afternoon and evening.

It was different than college. You can't miss anything, you have to really pay attention. You have to have tunnel vision. You can't blink.

This is a job now, they try to ingrain that in your head. You have to stay focused.

After dinner, there are even more team meetings.

These team meetings are all about getting to know you as a person, get the real lowdown on you. I wanted to go out there and be myself and be truly honest.

They'll ask you questions to understand your personality, some want to take in your knowledge of the game. I got asked about different schemes and my understanding of what my role would be in how they line up. It's all about trying to see your knowledge of the game and if you understand the role or the concept.

At the NFL level, teams want to make sure you are willing to study, that you're a student of the game. You can't get by on being bigger, faster and stronger, you have to not just love football but you have to be willing to love the art of football.

To know and understand the game as a student, to be willing to throw yourself into the game, the ins and outs, to help whatever team drafts you.

Now I get ready for the NFL Combine. My workouts down here in Florida are intense. There are interview preps and good diets.

I'll tell you, I'm eating more greens than I ever did in my life. I didn't know there are so many types of cabbage. It is good though. And broccoli isn't bad.

The lifts and workouts push you, and then the positional work, getting better as a pass rusher, really pushes you. I'm enjoying it, though.

And on the flip side, I hope you enjoyed this look at my life as I get ready for the NFL draft. It's been quite a ride but I'm loving every minute of it.

Even the cabbage.

Aries Protect your assets and your physical and emotional well-being. Keep your secrets hidden from government, institutions or employers.

Taurus Choose the people you trust carefully. Misunderstandings are apparent if you mix money and emotions. Ulterior motives and manipulation are apparent.

Gemini Don't let the little things bother you. Someone will goad you into an argument that will not end well. Keep your feelings hidden and offer tactful responses.

Cancer Rumor-mongering or letting others interfere in your business will cause anger and frustration. Don't discuss your personal life with your peers or your employer.

Virgo Arguments will develop when dealing with domestic matters or partnerships. Don't give in to pressure tactics. Be articulate and take a firm stance.
